FOREWORD

The compiling of this geneological tree of the descendants of Alexander Callander and his good wife, Agnes Stirling, has been a source of real pleasure to me. While getting the information entailed a lot of work, it put me in touch with many of the cousins of whom I had never heard. It also gave me something to occupy my time; induced me to read Scottish History, which I found very interesting; and, best of all, led me to worship at the shrine of our forefathers, who did so much for us.

The geneological tree, to the best of my knowledge, is complete as at January 1st, 1956. It contains records of dates of births and deaths of all the descendants, and the names of those whom they married.

It was our intention to publish this a year ago but there were a few of the descendants of whom we had not definite information, but in the last few months, we have received this, which makes the records complete.

The spelling of proper names has been the great problem, and no doubt many mistakes have been made in this respect. There are many ways of spelling the same name, and in many cases we had to use the spelling which seemed the most likely to be correct.

Since early manhood I have cherished the thought that I would some day see a record of the Canadian Callanders, but up to a few years ago, I was a busy man, and did not have time to carry out the project.

About fifteen years ago I interested my sister Mrs. Ellen Callander Hamilton, of Ottawa in this venture. She in turn secured the assistance of cousin William Callander, of Hamilton. To these two Callanders we owe much for the success of this venture, collecting a large amount of information that would have been very difficult for me to obtain.

We are also very much indebted to Mr. Kenneth Callender of Latrobe, Ohio. This gentleman has been collecting information about the Callenders of the United States, and hopes in the near future to publish a history of that great family. The Callenders of the great Republic to the South of us are undoubtedly of the same blood as ourselves, and it is our hope that in the near future someone will prove that they are the descendants of our forebears who in the early days of that country emigrated from Scotland and more than likely from Falkirk.

THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY

The collection of the New York Public Library is one of the most valuable in the world. It contains a vast amount of material, including books, manuscripts, and other documents. The collection is constantly growing, and it is one of the most important resources for scholars and researchers. The library is open to the public, and it is a place where anyone can come to read and study. The collection is divided into several departments, and each department is headed by a specialist. The collection is also used for research, and it is a place where many important discoveries have been made.

In compiling this record, showing the names of our relatives and tracing our ancestry, I have felt the limitations of not having a better record of Scottish History than the libraries of Winnipeg afford. I feel, therefore, that I have only touched the fringe of what can be got, and hope that some younger member of the family may take it up where I lay it down, add to the tree as time goes on, delve deeper into the records than I have done, and if he does, I assure him that he will find it not only interesting but extremely fascinating.

THE ROMANS IN SCOTLAND

In order to fully understand Scottish History, it is necessary to go back as far as possible and study the conditions prevailing in that country and also the people that inhabited it.

We know very little about the inhabitants of Scotland before A.D. 80, but History tells us in that year, the Romans under Agricola, subdued all of Scotland south of the mountains. He found the country settled by a large number of Celtic tribes, or clans and each clan under the domination of a chief. Agricola was entirely successful, and drove most of these clans north into the mountains, but he could not go farther because his disciplined Roman soldiers were not accustomed to mountain warfare. He therefore decided to occupy that portion of Scotland now known as the Lowlands and leave the tribes he had driven north to occupy the mountain fastnesses. He did not, however, drive all the tribes into the mountains but allowed any who would do homage and pay tribute to Rome to remain and occupy their lands. Thus the Highlanders and the Lowlanders are of the same Celtic blood.

The clans that remained in the south, were in daily association with their conquerors and consequently adapted many of their customs and modes of living. They therefore became much more civilized than their brothers in the North, who still lived their wild life in the mountains with an undying hatred for the Romans who had driven them from their old homes. They therefore became a constant menace to the conquerors, and their attacks became so frequent and persistent, that as a defence against these invasions, Agricola built a great wall of stones, earth and sods, extending from Carreden on the Firth of Forth on the East, to Chapel Hill, near Kilpatrick on the Firth of Clyde, on the West, a distance of about 56 miles. This wall is known in history as "Agricola's Wall". This wall did not prove barrier enough to keep the Highland Clans in check, so in A.D. 139, the Roman Emperor, Marcus Antonius Pius, instructed his imperial legate, Lollius Urbicus, to increase the size of this wall, which he did. The size of the wall when finished was 20 ft. high, 30 ft. wide at the base and had a trench running the full length on the north side 40 ft. wide and 20 ft. deep, which was kept filled with water. On the top of this wall lookouts were built not more than two miles apart; they also cleared the land for some distance north of the wall in order to have a better chance to see the invaders.

In several places on the south side of the wall, and therefore protected by it, the Romans built fortresses for their governors or leaders, barracks for their soldiers and houses for their families, these afterwards became the nucleus of towns. It would appear that the most important and strongest of these was one midway between the Firth of Clyde and Firth of Forth, where the thriving city of Falkirk now stands and, from Roman accounts, it would appear that this was the headquarters of the Roman Army in Scotland, and residence of the Governor. We mention this specially because in succeeding chapters we deal with this place. The remains of this Roman wall are to be seen in many places, but nowhere more distinctly than around the city of Falkirk.

In 525 A.D. Southern European Countries were pressing Rome so severely that she was obliged to withdraw all of her troops from Britain to defend her own shores, thus leaving the part of the country she had conquered to its fate; this part was all of Great Britain, except the Highlands of Scotland.

The Romans did much for the people they had conquered; they introduced Christianity, taught the natives new modes of living, and in every way showed them how civilized people lived. The high position the British people afterwards held was due largely to the teaching of their Roman conquerors.

The above shows the very important fact that both Highlander and Lowlander are of Celtic stock, but with this difference -- the Highlander still lived his wild life in the mountains, while the Lowlander mixing daily with his conquerors, naturally accustomed himself to the more civilized ways of the Romans.

THE BAIRNS O' FALKIRK

Falkirk is a city of about 56,000 inhabitants at the present time, situated at the foot of the mountains but is a Lowland city. It is about midway between Glasgow, the business metropolis of Scotland, and Edinburgh, the political capitol, being less than 20 miles from either. The surrounding country has large deposits of both iron and coal and is also one of the finest Agricultural districts in Scotland.

Owing to its proximity to the supplies of iron and coal, coupled with splendid transportation facilities, it is natural that it should be a city of iron products. There are several iron works in Falkirk, the most noted of which is the "Caron Iron Works", which is one of the largest of its kind in the world. It takes the iron ore, smelts, refines, moulds and finishes the product. It turns out almost everything that can be made from that metal. Its principal market is the British Isles but it also ships goods to almost every country in the world.

Owing to the immense amount of coal consumed in these Iron Works and the consequent prevalence of smoke other adjacent cities, who are not so fortunate, allude to it as DIRTY FALKIRK.

The first name of the place now known as Falkirk was "Eaglaes Brae", a Gaelic name meaning "Church of the Speckled or Mottled Stone". Later Simon of Durham, a monk refers to it as Egglesbrett, but in the later part of the thirteenth century the place received the name of Faulkirke, so called from a red brick church built by Malcolm Cannimore before 1090. The name is evolved from two Gaelic words, "Fraw" or "frau", and "Kirk", meaning "Red Church".

There has been three separate church buildings on the site where the magnificent stone church now stands, first the ancient building, presumably of stone, but when and by whom it was built we do not know, then the red brick church built by Malcolm Cannimore before 1090, and lastly the beautiful stone structure erected about 1800, that now occupies the site. The present building was remodelled in 1918 and is now among the finest Scottish Church edifices outside the cities of Glasgow and Edinburgh.

Two famous battles were fought near Falkirk, the first on July 22, 1298. Sir William Wallace, with his Scottish soldiers, had invaded England but was forced to retreat, followed closely by the English. Wallace made his last stand at Falkirk, but was defeated. He at once resigned his office as "Guardian of Scotland", and sailed for France.

The second battle of Falkirk was fought on January 17, 1746, between adherents of Prince Charlie, and the English. The Scots were entirely successful, only to be defeated a few days later by the same English Army in the Battle of Culloden. This closed the career of the Bonnie Prince in Scotland.

Nearly everything on the south side of Falkirk has the name of Callander. There is the "Callander Riggs", a row of ancient stone cottages supposed to be at one time occupied by the Retainers of Callander House; there are also Callander Lake, Callander Mines, Callander Canal, Callander Street, etc.

The writer well remembers his first visit to Falkirk. Knowing that it was the place from which my grandfather came, I was anxious to know if any people of our name still lived there. Leaving Glasgow by a morning train I arrived in Falkirk about 9:30. Proceeding down High Street, which is the main thoroughfare, I had gone some distance when my eyes fell on a sign "John Callander Book-Seller". Entering the store I saw two young ladies busily dusting and arranging stock. The store was of considerable dimensions and contained a nice, well-kept stock. The time was now about 10:30. Approaching the young lady who seemed to be in charge, I enquired if Mr. Callander was in, to be informed that Mr. Callander did not get down to business before eleven o'clock. Excusing myself and saying I would call again, I proceeded down High Street about a block and a half and on the other side of the street, I beheld a sign reading "W.B. Callander Silversmith". In front of this store were a man of about fifty-five years of age and a young man of about eighteen, engaged in taking down the shutters of the store preparing for the day's business. The shutters were of the old type, made of boards and fastened by bolts passing through the sash and secured by keys on the inside. Waiting patiently until the shutters had been safely stored away, I approached the older man and enquired if he were Mr. Callander: he eyed me closely for a few seconds, then leisurely answered y-e-s. I then informed him that Callander was my name and that I came from Canada; He eyed me the more closely, but said nothing for some time. The situation was becoming almost unbearable to me, used as I was to Canadian and United States business ethics, so after what seemed to me to be minutes I ventured to say, "Mr. Callander, I am not hard up. I do not want a shilling". He now looked at me harder than ever, when all at once a quiet smile broke over his kind Scottish face which ended in a quiet laugh, and we were friends. I have since paid two more visits to Falkirk and each time have been royally entertained by Mr. W. B. Callander and his good wife. The young man mentioned above was his son, James B. who afterwards came to Canada. After working for some time in Winnipeg, he moved to Port Arthur, Ontario. He only lived in Port Arthur about two years when he moved to Edmonton, Alberta, working for Ash Brothers for a short time, when he was given charge of the watch department of Jackson Brothers Jewellers of that city. This position he held until the Spring of 1935. The high altitude of Edmonton proved too much for his wife's health; his father had grown old and felt that James B. should come back to Scotland to take over the established business which had been built up in Falkirk. James B. returned to his native town, where he now may be found doing business at the old stand.

Any account of Falkirk would not be complete without mentioning the "TRYST". Falkirk boasts of a famous fair, "The Tryst" It used to be a weekly sale of cattle but is now held only once in the year, and lasts about a week. People from both Lowlands and Highlands attend it; large numbers of cattle are sold, as well as other commodities, but the great object is a getting together of the people as the name would indicate.

A short distance from Falkirk is the Callander Estate on which is situated the famous Callander House. The home of Mr. Charles William Forbes, Lord of Callander. It is a beautiful mansion, in fact one of the best of its kind in Britain.

A few years ago Mr. Forbes was having some repairs made to the back part of the Castle and when the builders removed a portion of the oak panelling, they discovered that some of the stone wall was eight and one half feet thick. It also bore unmistakable proof that this wall was the work of the Romans. This, with the remains of the old Roman wall, which are to be seen on the grounds, are ample to prove that Callander House was a stronghold of the Romans and home of the Governor.

The Callander House of today is a very different edifice from the one vacated by the Romans. Each succeeding occupant seems to have improved and added to it. The present owners have not only added to the house but have done wonders in beautifying the grounds, which are splendidly kept, neither time nor expense being spared to make it one of the best kept British homes.

Mr. Thomas Houson gives us a good description of Callander House, and we cannot do better than quote his words. He says:-

"In many respects Callander House, the residence of Mr. Charles William Forbes, is one of the most interesting and remarkable houses in Scotland. In itself it is a fine and impressive structure, on account of its size and architecture. It contains a great number of articles of both personal and historic value, and its rooms have been occupied by people whose names live in the romance and history of the country. It is a house which has grown and it is doubtful whether the most learned architectural antiquarian could say with certainty into how many periods the house should be divided. There are parts of the wall $8\frac{1}{2}$ ft. thick and there is a piece of the wall said to be of Roman workmanship. The interior of part of this was lined with oak panelling which was being removed about twelve years ago, to be cleaned of paint and replaced, and it was then that the character of the masonry was discovered.

Speculation in this case is helped by positive history and antiquarian research as, not far from the North front and parallel with it, runs through the park a section of Antonius wall, built in 142 A. D. by Lollius Arbius, under orders from the Emperor Antonius Pius, to keep off the Northern tribes. Along this wall was a great military road, with stone forts at intervals. This wall followed largely the line of Agricola's wall built in 80 A.D., but was much stronger."

A beautiful avenue sweeps past the front -- the main entrance is beautifully carved and the grounds are splendidly wooded. The house has length, height, and mass. There is a wing on either side of the main building, but these are not so high, nor do they extend as far forward as the main building.

The old house of historic days has now a courtyard where the central part forms a porch; this has been added since 1813, for in that year Alexander Naysmith made a drawing of the house and it is not shown. The whole edifice as seen from the north side is one of turrets, parapets, crow shaped gables, stone chimneys and beautiful cornical roofs to towers. Stone is visible on the outer front and wings, while the extensions have plastered rough-cast headings which make a very charming whole.

Above two rooms on the ground floor is the inscription "Queen Mary of Scots and her ladies occupied these rooms and the rooms above them August 1, 1562, July 1, 1565, January 15, 1567 and January 29, 1567."

C A L L A N D E R

When the Romans took possession of the Lowlands of Scotland, the Celtic tribe that inhabited the territory around where the city of Falkirk now stands, agreed to do homage and pay tribute to their conquerors, and for the privilege of retaining their lands, were to supply the Roman fortress with wood, and were named by the Romans "Calentaria", The Roman word for a bundle of sticks. It would appear that the name of Callander was derived from Calentaria. In 1156 King James I issued a charter to Dumfortor of Calentaria. In 1296 the name appears as Kalanter and also as Kalentar, and about 1502, records show it spelled Kalentor, Calentyr, Calander, Calendar, and Callander. From this it would appear that our name Callander is derived from the Roman word Calentaria, the name given our ancestors by the Romans because they furnished them with wood. This proves that not only are we of Celtic origin, but that our original name was a Roman word.

In the United States there are a lot of people who spell their name Callender and claim to be of Scottish parentage. These no doubt are descendants of the same people as ourselves, but adopted the other mode of spelling. So far they have only been able to trace their ancestry to Samuel Callendar, a Veteran of the American Civil War.

When the Romans evacuated Scotland in A. D. 325, they left their fortresses, their homes, and the improvements they had made to the native tribes. How natural it would be that the Chief of the Clan, Calentaria, should take possession of the Governor's fortress. This would seem to be the beginning of Callander House and the Chieftain that first occupied this fortress was first Thane of Callander.

Neither written or legendary history throws much light on what transpired in Scotland from 550 to 1178, but during the latter year Alwin I, was created first Earl of Lennox. It is claimed that he was son of Murdoch and grandson of Maldoun, both Celtic Chieftains.

On the death of Alwin I, in 1217, his son Alwin II, became Earl of Lennox. He married Eva, daughter of Gilcrest, which united the Earldoms of Lennox and Monteith. They had two children, Maldoun and Eva. Eva married Malcolm, son of Duncan, Thane of Callander. Maldoun was a soldier of a roving and adventurous disposition with no home ties. On the marriage of his sister Eva, to Malcolm, he presented them with his estates and titles, including Kilsythe and others. In 1240 Alwin de Callander succeeded to the title and lands of his father, which included Thane of Callander; thus Alwin de Callander was the first Thane of Callander on record, but his forbears had resided in Callander House.

John de Callander succeeded his father about 1296. He did homage to Edward I of England and fought against Sir William Wallace. At this time Callander House was the headquarters of the English Army in Scotland, and it is recorded that Edward I presented Lady Callander with a cask of flour, a cask of wine and four quarters of Barley Malt; he also knighted her husband. In 1305 Sir John de Callander lost his life fighting for his King.

Upon the death of Sir John de Callander there were many claimants for his Estates and Titles. The affair was brought to the King's notice and he appointed Sir Archibald Livingstone, Sheriff of Stirling, to determine who was the rightful heir, and Sir Archibald's decision was, "That as Alwin de Callander being son of the deceased John de Callander, and being twenty-eight years old he was the nearest heir." He therefore became Earl of Callander, etc. He died in 1345 and was succeeded by his son Patrick. Patrick had married and lived in Callander House with his father before he became Sir Patrick. His wife had died and left him with one child - a daughter named Christine.

When Edward I of England attempted to unite the crowns of England and Scotland, Sir Patrick allied himself with the English. As we all know the scheme was not successful and Callander Estate was confiscated by the Scottish Government.

In 1345 Christine Callander, having received a regrant of the lands and titles, married William Livingstone, thus uniting the great houses of Callander, Lennox, Kilsythe, Kilmarmock and Livingstone. William Livingstone and his wife Christine Callander resided in Callander House.

Sir Patrick was the last man named Callander, who owned the estate and held the title Earl of Callander.

T H E L I V I N G S T O N E S

The title "Earl of Callander" and possession of Callander Estate remained in the Livingstone family for 370 years (1345-1715).

On the death of Sir William Livingstone, John Livingstone became heir of both his father's and mother's estates and titles, which were; Earls of Callander, Lennox, Kilsythe, Kilmarmock and Livingstone. Sir John was killed in the Battle of Hamilton, September 14, 1402, and was succeeded by his son, Alexander.

Sir Alexander Livingstone was a man of more than ordinary ability and influence. In 1449 he was appointed to the Judiciary of Scotland and the Scottish Government appointed him guardian of King James, who afterwards became James I of England. His successor was his son James.

As soon as Sir James Livingstone came into possession of the lands and titles of his father, the King (James I of England) made him Baron Callander. This was about 1480.

There was another union of the Callander and Livingstone families which might be recorded here. Elizabeth Livingstone, daughter of James Livingstone, married Robert, son of Robert Callander of Durator, and their son, Robert Callander of Banloich, married Marion Lindsay. They had a daughter who married James Livingstone of Kilsythe.

William Livingstone succeeded his father, Sir James about 1500. This man seems to have been the "black sheep" of the Livingstone family. He was of a very quarrelsome disposition; his treatment of his wife, and family was such that he was divorced by his wife and estranged from his family. He did not live long to be thus disgraced, and was succeeded by his son, Alexander.

This Sir Alexander Livingstone died in early manhood and his son William took his place.

Sir William Livingstone was a strong supporter of Mary Queen of Scots, and his sister, Mary Livingstone, was one of her ladies in waiting. Mary Queen of Scots was a frequent visitor at Callander House. About 1590 Sir William died and his son Alexander succeeded him. From 1596 to 1603 when King James of Scotland came to the throne of England, as James I, Princess Elizabeth made Callander House her home, the guest of Sir Alexander Livingstone. When King James was established on the British Throne, Princess Elizabeth made her home at Windsor Castle. Sir Alexander died in 1603 and his son, James, succeeded him.

Sir James Livingstone was first Earl of Callander, Livingstone and Linlithgow. He was a noted soldier and Royalist and, during Cromwell's protectorate, Callander House was headquarters of the Royalist Army in Scotland. Cromwell confiscated all of Sir James' estates, which were returned to him at the Restoration. He not only had his estates and titles returned to him but, as he had no children, the King named his brother's son, Alexander, to be his successor. Sir James Livingstone died in 1622, and was buried at Falkirk.

Sir Alexander Livingstone occupied Callander House as Earl of Callander, etc., from 1622 to 1685 and, as he had no children, he named his nephew Alexander, son of his brother George Livingstone, as his successor.

Sir Alexander Livingstone, son of George Livingstone, died in 1692 and his son James succeeded him. Sir James was very prominent in the rebellion of 1715 for which the Government confiscated his estates and sold them to the York Building Company for £18751-15-0. In the meantime, Sir James had died but his wife, Lady Ann, and his son lived in Callander House.

In 1792 "The York Building Company" went into liquidation and the Callander Estate, together with the Barony of Almond, was put up for sale by public auction.

An agreement was made between the creditors of the York Building Company and Lady Ann, whereby she was to pay the creditors a sum of money that would settle all claims against the building company, which was fixed as the knock down price. Everything was settled--Lady Ann and her son were to receive the property. At the day of the sale to the surprise of all, William Forbes, a wealthy merchant of Aberdeen, at once bid £83100, which was much more than the knock down bid. This bid was made up as follows: -- £66500 for Callander Estate and £16600 for the Barony of Almond. Lady Ann was not present at the sale, nor was she represented by council. The assignee for the York Building Company and Court Officials were stunned by this offer. They called a hurried conference and concluded to checkmate Mr. Forbes by ordering the auctioneer to demand cash for the property, which he did, but Mr. Forbes was equal to the occasion and at once produced a £100,000 government note and demanded his change.

Thus Callander Estate, with Callander House and title, Earl of Callander, became the property of William Forbes, whose great grandson, Charles William Forbes, is the present occupant.

T H E F O R B E S

William Forbes seems to have been a man of very modern ideas of business, and would be considered a shrewd business man and able to take his place today with the speculators on Wall Street.

Humor has it that he made his money by supplying the British Admiralty with copper to sheet the hulls of their ships. The first experiment was not a success and Forbes bought the copper back at scrap prices. Meanwhile the Admiralty continued experimenting and at last achieved success. The Admiralty then wished to buy the copper sheets from Forbes, but he asked a fabulous price for them. They then tried to buy them elsewhere, but found that Mr. Forbes had cornered the copper market of the world, and, if they were going to sheet their ships with copper, they had to buy it from Forbes and pay him his price, which they did using not only what they had returned, but very much more, for which they paid Mr. Forbes his own price.

Another good story is told of this Mr. William Forbes. It would appear that at the time Mr. Forbes bought the property, the incumbent minister of Falkirk had a lease or claim of some kind upon a pasture field on the estate, and very naturally Mr. Forbes was anxious to hold a clear title, so one evening he invited the minister to dinner and after they had eaten and drunken until both were in good spirits, Mr. Forbes succeeded in getting the Reverend Gentleman to sign a release. When the parson had time to consider the affair he rued having signed away his claim, so on the following Sunday morning he preached from the text taken from Second Timothy, 4th Chapter and 14th Verse, - - "Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil; the Lord reward him accordingly".

THE CALLANDERS OF TODAY

So far we have been writing a history of the Callanders, the Livingstones and the Forbes who lived in Callander House, but who are the myriads of people that bear that name? Many live in Falkirk and other parts of Scotland. They are also found in England, Ireland, and Wales, also in India, Australia, South Africa, and the Islands of the Sea. There is a large body of people who are called by that name living in the United States; in fact there are few countries, if any, in the world where the name is not known.

We think the answer to our question is quite apparent, as only the eldest son could inherit the lands and titles of the father, the younger sons had to go out into the world to follow the ordinary callings in life. They became merchants, tradesmen, lawyers, medical men, ministers, as well as all other callings. They married into other families and, as was customary, emigrated to other countries as our Grandfather did. New associations, intermarrying with the peoples of other countries for several generations made the Callanders forget their ancestors and, while they knew that they were of Scottish blood, they were entirely ignorant of who their ancestors were farther back than two or three generations.

When the writer first thought of taking up this investigation the only clue he had was gotten from Maggie Thomson, who told him that her Mother, (Aunt Nan) used to tell her stories of what she had seen in Falkirk. We are of the opinion that not one person in five, now living, who are descendants of Alexander Callander and Agnes Stirling, know that such a man and woman ever lived. We also think that this accounts for the various spellings of the name, but there is one thing that we do believe, and that is that if we were able to trace our lineage back, we would find that all who bear the name of Callander (and its similar spellings) are descendants of the first Thane of Callander who occupied Callander House after the Romans had deserted it.

Much time and space have been taken to trace our lineage and while some of it cannot be proven from history, most of it is authentic and may be taken as a most probable History of the Callanders.

THE CALIFORNIA

It is not only the fact that the California is a large and powerful ship, but also the fact that she is a ship of the future. She is a ship of the future in every sense of the word. She is a ship of the future in every sense of the word. She is a ship of the future in every sense of the word.

In 1929 the writer was in Edinburgh and visited the office where the records of births, marriages and deaths, with dates and other information of the various parishes in Scotland, are kept. These entries are made by the incumbent minister at the time they take place. It was very interesting to read the different accounts. The announcements were written in the various forms peculiar to the times. The phraseology and spelling were at times almost humorous, but the records were there, although very hard to decipher.

The records of the Parish of Falkirk contained about twenty volumes of probably 200 or 300 pages each. The first volume was opened in October 1611, and on the first page is recorded a son, Samuel, was born to Samuel Callander on October 30, 1611. It did not give his mother's name. The next Callander entry was on October 4, 1614, stating that John Callander married Janet Baird.

The records from 1614 to 1680 were very badly mutilated, but enough information was gotten to show that a son was born to John Callander in 1615, and that John Callander was married in 1636 and also that a son was born to him in 1638. The name of this boy could not be definitely decided, but it looked like William---there was a marriage of William Callander in 1657. A son John was born to William Callander on February 1, 1658. In 1680 John Callander married Agnes Smith and their son James was born on January 5, 1697. On February 15, 1715, he married Janet Henderson. Their son George was born on October 21, 1716. George Callander married Margaret Young October 25, 1741; their son John was born on February 12, 1742. John Callander married Janet Watt on October 30, 1760. Their son Alexander was born February 12, 1775, and was married to Agnes Stirling, June 15, 1802. This is the couple that emigrated to Canada in 1820.

If we trace this Alexander back to Samuel Callander, father of the boy Samuel born in 1611, and father also of John Callander, mentioned in the second entry, we have; --

Alexander Callander
 Son of John Callander
 Grandson of Geo. Callander
 Great grandson of James Callander
 Great great grandson of John Callander
 Great great great grandson of William Callander

Great great great great grandson of John Callander
Great great great great

great grandson of John Callander

Great great great great

great great grandson of Samuel Callander who was father of both the second Samuel and John Callander.

The appended genealogical tree gives a very accurate account of the descendants of Alexander Callander from his birth in 1775 to the present time (January 1936)

GRANDFATHER AND GRANDMOTHER

We must not close this record without a short history of Alexander and his noble little wife, Agnes Stirling. They were my grandparents, I being son of their youngest child, Alexander.

They were both born in Falkirk, and Grandfather served his apprenticeship as a blacksmith in the old shop known as Callander Smiddy. When the writer first visited Falkirk the old Smiddy was still standing. At that time it was used as a bicycle repair shop, but the old forges were still there; no doubt Grandfather spent the days of his young manhood working at one of these. Shortly after my visit the old Smiddy was torn down and a two story building erected in its place. The lower story is now occupied by the agency of Singer Sewing Machine and the upper story as a dwelling.

Across High Street is a property consisting of five two story stone buildings, known as the Callander property. The present owner is William Brown, whose Mother was a Callander. She was of a very kind disposition and was known in Falkirk as "Auntie Brown".

High Street here diverges to the left and another street branches off to the right, forming a point or triangle. On this triangle is erected a stone building known as "Callander Tavern". No person seems to know when it received that name.

Grandfather and Grandmother caught the Canadian fever and early in 1820 left Falkirk for Canada. When they left Falkirk they had with them six children, James, Elizabeth, John, Isabella, William and Agnes. While they were waiting for their ship at Greenock, their eldest child, James, died and was buried there. While on board ship a baby girl, Jeannie, was born but only lived a short time and was buried at sea. Two other sons were born to them in Canada, James and Alexander.

The trip across the Atlantic was made in an old-man-of-war, that had been sunk during the Napoleonic wars. It had been raised and was now being used to transport emigrants to the Colonies. Adverse winds and very stormy weather delayed the old sailing vessel, but they landed in Quebec some time in June. With them were several other Scottish families, among whom were the Wallaces, the Parks and the Millars.

When they arrived in Quebec they were all practically penniless. It has been said that Grandfather landed in Quebec with a wife, five children and a sixpence.

The manufactured goods used in Canada at this time were made in Britain, brought to Quebec in ships and from there were carried by French Voyageurs to Montreal and Upper Canada in flat bottomed scows called Batteaux. These were loaded with goods and, where the water was smooth, were propelled by sails, but when the rapids of the St. Lawrence were reached, they had to be towed. These Scottish emigrants obtained passage for themselves and families by assisting in this work. This was a long and tedious journey and, when they reached Prescott, the Voyageurs had no further use for the emigrants, there being very little or no current between there and Toronto, so they were put ashore.

They immediately began their march inland and in December reached a place in Dalhousie Township, in the County of Lanark. This place is about two miles north of what is now known as Watson's Corners. They picked the high ground for their homes as the low was wet and swampy. The men set to work cutting down trees and built a shanty, but how they existed until they reaped their scanty harvest in 1821, we cannot conceive.

After years of hard labour clearing the land, these Scottish families came to the conclusion that the land was not worth the clearing and decided to leave Dalhousie. The Millars moved south into Bathurst Township, the Parks to Western Ontario, while the Callanders and Wallaces moved east to North Gower township, County of Carleton. The Wallaces settled north of what is now known as North Gower Village, while the Callanders made their home south of it. They bought their land from the Canada Company, and paid for it by selling Potash made from the ashes of the log-piles made in clearing the land.

It may be interesting to note in passing that, while practically every acre of land settled by the Wallaces is still in possession of someone by that name, not an acre of that settled by the Callanders is owned by any of their descendants, nor is there a Callander in North Gower Township and only one in Carleton county, Alexander, son of James Callander, who lives in Ottawa.

Grandfather died in 1850, aged seventy-five, but Grandmother lived until 1866, being eighty-four when she died. They were a noble pair, both morally and spiritually good, and while they endured hardships such as very few are called upon to go through, their lot was also most trying, but they always made the best of it and were cheerful, and when we, their descendants, think of them, we have reason to be thankful and proud that we have the blood of such heroic forbears running through our veins.

By a study of the appended genealogical tree it will be seen that we are not only scattered over the whole of North America, from Atlantic to Pacific in both Canada and the United States, but in other countries.

The senior member of the connection today is Alexander Thomson, son of Agnes Callander and Gilbert Thomson. Alex. was born in 1848 and is therefore eighty-eight years of age. Jean Callander, daughter of Alexander Callander and Agnes Brown is the next oldest, born in 1849, and is therefore eighty-seven years old. For the third place there are three contestants, Alexander Stirling, son of James Callander and Margaret Morgan; David, son of William Callander and Harriet Barrows; and William, son of William Callander and Margaret Wallace. These were each born in 1854, making them eighty-two years of age.

OUR ILLUSTRIOUS COUSINS

The Callanders as a people have not been noted for their participation in the public callings. Most of them were good farmers or good mechanics; a few have been good students of Theology; some have entered the field of Science and made a success; some have stood very high in the Medical Profession, especially in Surgery.

A few of these have given so much of themselves to their profession that special mention ought to be made of them.

James Bell, M.D., C.M., was a graduate of McGill University and a very successful practitioner in the city of Montreal. For many years before his death he was professor of Surgery in McGill and had probably the largest surgical practice in Canada at that time. At the time of King Edward VII's first illness, Dr. Bell was one of the two physicians in Canada that were consulted. He died in 1911, at the early age of 59, very much mourned by the staff and the medical students of McGill.

Dr. Cyrus Newton Callander, son of John Callander and Mary Ann Brownlee, was born at Kirkton, Ontario. He received his early education in Kirkton Public School, St. Mary's High School and St. Catharines' Collegiate Institute. He taught school for several years before he took up the study of Medicine. During the first three years of his medical course, he taught in Toronto Public Schools, attending lectures whenever he could, and each year passed a creditable examination. During his fourth year he gave his time exclusively to the study of Medicine, passing his final examinations with honors.

He practised in Ontario a short time when an old classmate, who was going to take post graduate work in Europe, offered him his practice in Wisconsin State, which he accepted, but after two years moved to Fargo, North Dakota. He was very successful and popular, and in a short time had a very large practice. He took several post graduate courses in surgery, and devoted the last years of his life almost entirely to that Science. In 1928 his health failed and he moved to San Fransisco, California, to be near his son, Dr. C. Latamer Callander, and his daughter, Mrs. Lewis P. Alabaster. He was an untiring worker and during the last few years of his active practice began a work on practical surgery. He worked assiduously on this after his retirement; his son gave him very valuable assistance and the work was nearly completed when he died in 1930. Dr. C. Latamer Callander completed the work, which is now one of the leading textbooks on Surgery and is used extensively in Medical Schools and by practitioners.

Dr. C. Latamer Callander, son of Dr. C. H. Callander, received his early education in the public and high schools of his native town, Fargo, North Dakota. He was graduated from Harvard University, B.A., in 1913, after which he attended Johns Hopkins Medical School, receiving his degree M.D. in 1917. He spent one year as interne in the Hospitals of Baltimore, Md., and then went to the hospitals in New York City for special training, especially in surgery, and was made "Fellow of the American College of Surgeons" (F.A.C.S.). He is now and has been for some time, a member of the faculty of the University of California Medical School, San Fransisco. He is instructor in Surgery and Topographical Anatomy and Assistant Clinical Professor of Surgery and Topographical Anatomy, and also associate visiting surgeon at the San Fransisco Hospitals. He has written several important articles for the Medical Journals and won the gold medal for his exhibit on a method of photography on living blood vessels, at the annual meeting of the American Medical Association in Atlantic City in 1922. He also won honorable mention at a meeting of the same Association held in Portland and also in Minneapolis. His greatest contribution to Surgical Science is the system of amputating a leg at the knee, with losing scarcely a drop of blood, thus avoiding the evil after effects of shock and loss of blood. When he graduated from Johns Hopkins Medical School, they conferred on him the degrees of Phi Beta Kappa and Alpha Omega Alpha, which are the highest honors they can bestow on any student.

In 1933, after his father's death, he finished the book "Surgical Anatomy", which had been begun by his father. This book is published by W.B. Saunders & Company, of Philadelphia.

Alexander Callander, eldest son of John Callander and Janette Millar, universally known as "Cousin Sandy", deserves a passing note. He was a farmer, living most of his life on the farm on which he was born. When his sons became capable of running the farm, he moved to the village of North Gower. Afterwards he made his home in Ottawa where he and his wife, Susie, spent their remaining days with their daughter, Violet, Mrs. G. Alfred Bruce. Cousins Sandy and Susie were a very amiable pair; their home was always open to the young people and their influence was felt among them. In early life Sandy allied himself with the Methodist Church and shortly afterwards was licensed a local preacher. His discourses were always practical, never aspiring to rhetoric, but he was always helpful. Cousin Sandy was always a welcome and comforting visitor to the sick. He died in 1919, his wife having predeceased him in 1914. They were a good pair.

A look at the honor roll of our distinguished cousins, will reveal that a great number have had the degree R.N. (Registered Nurse) conferred on them. These are the women who have had a thorough training in our hospitals. They do not prescribe medicine, but their business is to see that Doctors' orders are carried out to the letter. Their training is of such a nature that they are swift to detect any change of condition in a patient and know immediately what is best to do. Of all the professions there is none that is doing more to alleviate the suffering of the sick than the nurse. They are doing a great work.

KEY TO GENEALOGICAL TREE

The relationship existing between any two of the descendants may be known by comparing the numerals preceding the names. No two names are preceded by the same numerals.

This tree has been divided into seven sections, corresponding to the seven children of Alexander Callander and Agnes Stirling, who had families.

The numeral in the first column to the left of the name is always 1, representing Alexander Callander or the first generation, the second column to the left represents his children in the order of birth, and is the second generation, the fourth column his great grandchildren, and so on. Thus the seventh column is the seventh generation and represents his great, great, great, great, grandchildren.

By tracing any two of the descendants back to a common parentage, the relationship existing between them may be easily established.

Let us illustrate this. On page 45 we have 4 2 2 5 1 Sarah Agnes Callander, and on page 48 there is 1 3 9 5 1 Marion Corenne Callander. We find that they have a common parentage in the second generation which is 5 1, and this represents William Callander, son of Alexander. 4 2 2 5 1 Sarah Agnes Callander is fourth child of 2 2 5 1, William Richard Callander who is second child of 2 5 1, Alexander Callander who is second child of 5 1, William Callander, the common parent; thus Sarah Agnes is great grandchild of 5 1, William Callander.

1 3 9 5 1, Marion Corenne Callander, is the first child of 3 9 5 1, Delmer W. Callander who is third child of 9 5 1, William Callander who is ninth child of 5 1, William Callander; thus Marion is great grandchild of 5 1, William Callander and second cousin of Sarah Agnes.
